EMPOWERMENT ECHOES

LESSONS BEYOND THE BLACKBOARD: SEVEN-STATE SCHOOL NETWORK BRIDGES CLASSROOMS AND COMMUNITIES

From a live video link bridging Haryana and Kerala to a Labour Day lesson at a brick kiln, network institutions blend academic rigor with grassroots social action.

NEW DELHI — Across seven states and dozens of campuses, a quiet shift in education is unfolding. A review of quarterly activities across the school network reveals a pattern of initiatives that extend well beyond standard curricula, combining classroom learning with community engagement, social awareness and character building.

The quarter also witnessed two significant developments for the wider Human Welfare Foundation family. The LEAD 100 initiative, a flagship programme aimed at identifying and nurturing talented students from underprivileged communities, was formally launched, marking a new step in the Foundation's commitment to developing future leaders. At the same time, the Foundation mourned the demise of K. K. Mammunni Moulavi, Patron of the Human Welfare Foundation, whose life and service remain closely associated with its humanitarian mission and values.

Across the education network, campuses from Delhi to Malda marked seasonal milestones through flag hoistings, tree-planting drives and English literacy initiatives. Two distinct activities stood out during the quarter. In a cross-country exchange, students in rural Haryana connected via live video with peers in Kerala to share perspectives on regional culture and language. Meanwhile, in Bengal, a school replaced traditional Labour Day speeches with an experiential visit to a local brick kiln, giving students an opportunity to understand the dignity and value of labour firsthand.

Alongside these educational initiatives, the network's welfare programmes continued to support vulnerable communities, with more than 500 scholarships distributed to orphaned children and ₹7.2 lakh in direct assistance provided to rural women.

FEATURES & SPECIAL REPORTS

LEAD 100: IDENTIFYING POTENTIAL, NURTURING TALENT, BUILDING LEADERS

New Delhi: Recognising the immense talent among young people from underprivileged and backward communities, the Human Welfare Foundation (HWF) has launched LEAD 100 – Leadership Excellence for Advancement and Development, a flagship initiative aimed at identifying promising students early and supporting them throughout their educational journey.

The initiative seeks to bridge the gap created by financial constraints, limited guidance and inadequate exposure, which often prevent talented students from reaching their full potential. Under LEAD 100, 20 students will be selected annually during the first five years, creating a cohort of 100 promising young scholars.

Beginning after Class X, selected students will receive residential education in Delhi during Classes XI and XII, followed by continued academic and financial support through undergraduate, postgraduate and doctoral education.

LEAD 100 goes beyond conventional scholarship support. The program is designed to nurture critical thinking, communication skills, leadership qualities, character, ethical values and social responsibility, alongside academic excellence. Accordingly, the selection process will consider not only academic performance but also aptitude, reasoning ability, emotional intelligence, creativity, communication skills and leadership potential.

The initiative aims to nurture a generation of young people who combine professional excellence with integrity, leadership with social responsibility, and ambition with a commitment to the larger good.

The project was formally launched in New Delhi with the unveiling of its logo in the presence of Siraj Hussain (Retd. IAS), Chairman, HWF; Sadatulla Hussaini, Former Trustee, HWF; T. Arifali, Chairman, Vision 2026; Mohammed. Jafar, Vice Chairman, HWF; M. Sajid, General Secretary, HWF; Dr. SQR Ilyas, Dr. Hasan Raza and Mujtaba Farooq, Trustees, HWF; and P. K. Noufal, CEO, HWF.

Remembering

K. K. MAMMUNNI MOULAVI:
A LEGACY OF SERVICE AND EDUCATION

New Delhi: The passing of K. K. Mammunni Moulavi, a senior leader of Vision 2026, marks the end of a long association with initiatives in education, social welfare and community development. A scholar, educationist and social worker, Moulavi played an active role in programmes supporting underprivileged communities, particularly across North India.

Moulavi was closely associated with the development of hundreds of projects under Vision 2026. He served as a Trustee, Vice Chairman and later Patron of the Human Welfare Foundation, providing guidance to programmes spanning education, healthcare, community development, orphan care, livelihoods and disaster response.

Education remained an important area of his engagement. He was closely involved in supporting and mentoring orphaned and underprivileged children, encouraging them to pursue higher education and build independent and dignified lives. His association with educational and charitable institutions also contributed to efforts aimed at expanding access to learning and opportunities for disadvantaged communities.

Moulavi maintained a close connection with projects on the ground, including welfare and rehabilitation initiatives in underserved areas. His visits to project locations and interactions with beneficiaries reflected his involvement in the implementation of community-focused programmes and his interest in their impact on people's lives.

For Vision 2026 and its partner organisations, Moulavi's contribution forms part of a long record of work in education, social welfare and community empowerment. His association with these initiatives, along with the guidance he provided to colleagues and beneficiaries, remains an important part of the organisation's journey.

NO CHILD LEFT WITHOUT A KIT: HWF LAUNCHES SCHOOL KIT SCHEME FOR UNDERPRIVILEGED STUDENTS

HWF has launched its School Kit Scheme under the School Kit Distribution Project 2026, an initiative designed to support students—especially those from economically disadvantaged backgrounds—by providing essential educational materials that enhance academic performance and help them realise their full potential.

Under the scheme, free school kits comprising a school bag, notebooks, a pencil box, a lunch box and a water bottle are distributed to students, encouraging children to attend school and stay enrolled. The guiding principle is simple: no child should be left without the basic tools of learning.

At its heart, the scheme exists to promote education by offering free school kits that encourage children to attend and remain in school. Because financial burdens often prevent children from continuing their education, the initiative aims to alleviate some of that burden and thereby help reduce dropout rates. It also fosters educational equity by ensuring that children from all socio-economic backgrounds have access to the basic materials needed for learning. In doing so, the scheme serves as an incentive for parents to enrol their children in school and helps retain underprivileged children, particularly in rural and underserved areas.

Through these measures, the School Kit Distribution Project 2026 seeks to enhance learning opportunities, improve students' academic performance and support them in reaching their full potential.
